PRESENTATION: BUILDING A COMMUNITY STANDARD TO ADDRESS SYSTEMIC RACISM

Dr. Ben Danielson, MD, UW School of Medicine framed his talk through the lens of intersecting social determinants of health and racism. Dr. Danielson began by discussing the history of the black and brown experience informing present experience. Dr. Danielson touched on how many fear talking about racism in the health care system and do not want to discuss or face race. Many also do not want to discuss as they fear not having the right language. Basic representation in a health care setting's workforce of communities is essential and important, and when it actual comes to addressing racism the value of a young person seeing someone who looks like them is very important to the future that we all want and strive to see. Members discussed the difficulties of holding these conversations within their own institutions.

PRESENTATION: SOCIAL DETERMINANTS IN CLINICAL CARE FINAL GUIDELINES

Nick Locke, MPH, Bree Collaborative updated members on the progress of the social determinants of health (SDoH) guidelines. Guidelines have been disseminated for public comment and vetted by multiple stakeholders. The guideline outlines gaps and capacities within the health care system, data including race/ethnicity/language (REL), and the role of all our stakeholders. Barriers include resources being available for those in need (e.g., housing, food) the impact of racism on health, the role of our delivery systems and governmental entities, the role of purchasers in impacting SDoH and their enthusiasm to do so, REL data responsibilities and opportunities for health plans, and SDoH screening within delivery systems. Members discussed the difficulty and importance of this as a service line.
